Major US indices were weak in December, but the falls ended what was an exceptionally strong year for equities. Inflation cooled in major markets and consumer spending remained strong, particularly in the US.

The year-end fall followed a note of caution over the pace of US interest rate cuts during 2025 by the Federal Reserve. The US central bank's dot plots, released after its December meeting, projecting just two interest rate cuts over the year. Inflation has remained stubborn – and several of president-elect Donald Trump's policies are likely to be inflationary. The Federal Reserve cut interest rates at its December meeting, as did the European Central Bank. US Treasury yields rose.

President-elect Trump has threatened new tariffs on China, Mexico and Canada from the first day of his presidency, as he targets illegal immigration and drug smuggling. These three countries account for about 40% of US imported goods. Also proposed are mass deportations that will make low-skilled workers scarce, and tax cuts that are likely to increase or support consumer spending. The US is still expected to engineer a soft economic landing as inflation is slowly brought down to the Federal Reserve's target level.

Political problems in France remain acute and the French government collapsed over disagreements relating to an austerity budget. Ousted Prime Minister Michel Barnier will act in a caretaker capacity until the appointment of a new government. South Korea was also thrust into political uncertainty after President Yoon Suk Yeol declared martial law. Mr Yoon currently remains in office, but on 31 December a warrant was issued for his arrest.

China loosened its monetary policy stance for the first time in 14 years, signalling a shift towards a "moderately loose" approach in 2025, moving away from the current "prudent" approach to address the mounting challenges in the economy. Market reactions were largely positive.

Third-quarter reporting season was supportive for markets. In general, results from the quarter were solid, but a significant number of businesses disappointed the market with their guidance for sales and profit in the coming quarters.
