Global stock markets continued to rally in November. US indices hit a series of new record highs, boosted by Donald Trump’s victory in the presidential election on a platform that included cuts to regulation and taxes. These policies are likely to boost the bottom line of corporate America.

Mr Trump’s victory is likely to make the Federal Reserve more cautious over the pace of interest rate cuts as the president-elect’s proposals on tariffs are likely to be inflationary. He has threatened new tariffs on China, Mexico and Canada from January, as he targets illegal immigration and drug smuggling. Mr Trump said he would put a 25% tariff on all goods imported from Canada and Mexico, with Chinese exports subject to an additional 10% tariff until Beijing cracks down on the illegal export of fentanyl to the US.

Political and budgetary problems in France are so acute that the French government may be about to collapse, with the uncertainty casting a shadow over valuations in the wider European Union. Marine Le Pen’s far-right National Rally is threatening to pull the plug on the fragile coalition government led by Prime Minister Michel Barnier, who is attempting to get his 2025 budget through parliament with a series of tax increases and public spending cuts totalling around €60bn.

Third-quarter reporting season is coming to an end and has been supportive for markets. In general, results from the quarter were solid, but a significant number of businesses disappointed the market with their guidance.

Chinese equities continued to be rangebound following their sharp rally in September after authorities announced the largest raft of stimulus measures since the Covid-19 pandemic. Investors’ confidence in the stimulus plans has waned and further action may be needed if the country is to hit Beijing’s GDP growth target of “around 5%”.

The global economy is experiencing a slowdown, but there is nothing in the data to suggest this could tip major economies into recession in 2025, although equity valuations remain elevated.
